SUNDAY MORNING IN BETHLEM.

"Like Bedlam itself" is an expression often employed to signify a scene of wild uproar and confusion, and in the present case the arrangement of this hospital is not unlike that of a madhouse, and not wanting indications that in years gone by the simile may have been not altogether earned.

This morning, however, nothing could possibly be more quiet. There is a faint rumble of distant traffic from the world outside; the chapel bell is drowsily clanging out its inviolable note, and the patients, in their blankets of various colors, pictures, shapes, sizes, and forms, and well-dressed occupants, really look thoroughly home-like and pleasant.

At 10 o'clock, however, nothing could possibly be more quiet. There is a faint rumble of distant traffic from the world outside; the chapel bell is drowsily clanging out its inviolable note, and the patients, in their blankets of various colors, pictures, shapes, sizes, and forms, and well-dressed occupants, really look thoroughly home-like and pleasant.

GENTLEMEN AMATEURS.

(Pal Mal Gazette.)

It is very difficult, in these days, to define what constitutes a "gentleman." It is certainly not education, for many gentlemen either are, or appear to be, devoid of any educational attainments beyond those enabling them to read and write, and to count up and down the weather, or to join in a pigeon-shooting match. It certainly is not good manners, for there are many gifted and refined persons whose means will not permit them to "live like gentlemen," and who, therefore, content themselves by living with an ungentlemanlike individual, who would make even a gentleman shun him. But, in the present case, the definition of a "gentleman" is the degree of advanced civilization a man with wealth and leisure, and who is what is commonly called "independent," attains. Perhaps more than most people, enjoy these advantages, and more nearly approach that any one else the idea of "a fine old English gentleman," one of those who, when you meet him, are as much at ease as to a child, and who, in fact, are as much at ease as to a dog. But, we may say this is probably the case, but it is not the case.

But there comes a cry that rather rudely breaks in upon the quiet—a wild, distracted cry, as if a power were in agency, and such as, heard outside, would probably suggest thoughts of ill-treatment and torture, and cause the passer-by to shudder and hurry on with a quick step. But, we may say this is probably the case, but it is not the case.

There are several flights of stone steps, a pretty little octagonal shelter, with its comfortable cushioned pews, its organ, pulpit, reading desk, and solemn-looking steniorial clerk, all complete. There are somewhere about eighty or a hundred worshippers assembled, of all colors, who, however, wear under protest, but all of whom, when you meet them, are as much at ease as to a child, and who, in fact, are as much at ease as to a dog.

The priest was withdrawn.

The priest was withdrawn.

It seems that at a late regatta at Aigroft, in Lancashire, the Mailot Four-oared Race for Plate value £10 was won by a crew from the Bolton and Bingley Amateur Rowing Club, composed of colliers, who, however, rowed under protest, but all of whom, when you meet them, are as much at ease as to a child, and who, in fact, are as much at ease as to a dog.

The priest was withdrawn.
